Residents flee flood threat

SKAGWAY (AF) — Wollies and children were evacuated Friday as the weather bureau warned this historic southeast Alaska town to brace itself for the possibility of its worst flood in history.

Only a leaking earthen dike kept the wild, rain-swollen Skagway River from sweeping out of its narrow mountain val-ley and through the community of 650 persons.

Mayor Edward C. Hanousek said the river, swollen to near record levels by more than three inches of rain in the last of seven inches an hour.

By mid-afternoon the rain apered off and the rapid rise of the river cased. The danger appeared over.

Wes Self, the city's civil defence director, said the dike had been reinforced, and there appeared no perceptible increase in the stream flow.

Light, intermittent rain was forecast during the night, but it was not expected to affect the flow of the river.

Water from the leaking dike flooded some basements early in the day and a bridge linking the town with the west bank of the river was washed out.

If the leaking dike should give way officials said the force of a resulting flash flood could wash most of the town into Taiya Inlet. a glacierg ou g e d, fjord-like waterway linking the mountainous area with the North Pacific.

Mr. Lloyd said the director of the centre was told by the local MLAs that no grant would be given the centre while this man was in charge, because they did not like his politics or his eco-nomic philosophy.

The directorate said the individual was efficient at his job but were told that made no dif-ference, Mr. Lloyd said.

The former premier said the man took things into his own hands by resigning so that the centre could qualify for grants.

According to his proposed, Indians would first vote in a plebiacite to decide if they wished to be represented by an Indian council system. If the vote was in favor, all registered Indians in the province would elect a non-political member from each area or reserve to sit on the Indian council.

The council would in turn elect two of its members to sit in the legislature as MLAs on the gov-ernment side, regardless of what party was in power.

As government members, they would have the same responsibility to persuade the balance of the legislative members to support their proposals, the same as any other.
